The Wrong Night to Camp

This summer I went camping on an islend near my home. I carried everything I would need in a napsack. When I reached the ranger station, he was talkin about which campsites were still available for camping tonite. I asked about a campsite near the lake. His anser was to nod his head and point to a trail going up to the left.

I climmed down a slope to the lake. I found a level spot to set up camp. I hung my supplies on a tree limm, using a special not my scout leader had taught me. I pitched my tent, started a fire, and prepared doe for biscuits.

While I waited for the griddle to get hot, I sat on a log and tried to scrach a desine on a chunk of wood. What a peaceful way to spend an afternoon. Then everything started to go wrawng. The sky opened up, and rain slammed down to the ground! I crawled quickly into the tent, but I looked like I had restled a bear in a mud puddle. I hoped the downpour would be over soon. I was hungry for those biscuits!
